NEW QUESTION: 1

What is true for real depreciation areas?

- A. They are set to always post to the G/L.
- B. Each can be assigned multiple currency types.
- C. You can post transactions to them independently.
- D. They can have values calculated from combining other depreciation areas values.

Answer: C

Explanation:

In Asset Accounting transactions that aren't integrated with AP/AR, you can choose to post them to specific depreciation areas. In addition, if a depreciation area isn't valid for an individual asset, you can deactivate it. The asset values then won't be updated for the deactivated area even for external transactions (an expense or loss account is debited to balance the technical clearing account in such cases). A real depreciation area doesn't have to post to the G/L; each area is assigned a specific currency type. Calculating values from other areas is the exact reason for having derived (not real) depreciation areas.

NEW QUESTION: 2

What are two use cases that are applicable to Cloud Pak for Multicloud Management?

- D. Kubernetes operators development
- E. Serverless management

Answer: D,E

NEW QUESTION: 3

Each increase of 1 percent in real disposable personal income per capita will increase the share of the electorate for an incumbent by about 2.2 percentage points, other things being equal. Since 1952 there has been a decline in real disposable income during only one presidential election year. The incumbent lost that election.

Which of the following conclusions can be properly drawn from the statements above?

- A. Political parties should take care to put forth a candidate who seems prosperous.
- B. Because a presidential campaign requires the expenditure of large amounts of money, it frequently impoverishes a candidate and his or her supporters.
- C. The outcome of a presidential election is substantially affected by factors other than the ideological positions of the candidates.
- D. When an incumbent runs for office, he or she is likely to win.
- E. Presidential candidates should put their greatest efforts into improving their public image.
