NEW QUESTION: 4

Your network contains a single Active Directory domain. The domain contains a System Center Configuration Manager 2007 site and a System Center 2012 Configuration Manager site. You need to ensure that you can migrate objects from Configuration Manager 2007 to Configuration Manager 2012. What should you do?

- A. Connect the Configuration Manager 2007 primary site as a child primary site of the Configuration Manager 2012 primary site.
- B. Extend the Active Directory schema and assign the Central Administration site server permissions to the System\System Management container.
- C. Connect the Configuration Manager 2012 primary site as a child primary site of the Configuration Manager 2007 primary site.
- D. Assign the computer account of the Central Administration site server permission to the Configuration Manager 2007 site.

Assign the computer account of the Central Administration site server permission to the Microsoft SQL Server database instance.

Answer: D

Explanation:

To migrate from a supported source hierarchy, you must have access to each applicable Configuration Manager source site, and permissions within the System Center 2012 Configuration Manager destination site to configure and run migration operations.
