Windows 8 migration - User data and settings

User State Migration Tools (USMT)

You can extract the USMT tools from the Windows ADK.

USMT is revised to version 5.0 for Windows Server 2012 and Windows 8, and consists of the following three programs:

Scanstate.exe: This tool performs the user state backup

Loadstate.exe: This tool performs the user state restore

Usmtutils.exe: This tool enables you to verify compressed migration store files as well as extract contents from them

Answer: D,F

NEW QUESTION: 3

- A. Option D
- B. Option C
- C. Option A
- D. Option B

Answer: D

NEW QUESTION: 4

Refer to the exhibit. AS #1 and AS #2 have multiple EBGP connections with each other. AS #1 wants all return traffic that is destined to the prefix 10.10.10.1/32 to enter through the router R1 from AS #2. In order to achieve this routing policy, the AS 1 advertises a lower MED from R1, compared to a higher MED from R3, to their respective BGP neighbor for the prefix 10.10.10.0/24. Will this measure guarantee that the routing policy is always in effect?

- A. Yes, because a lower MED in AS #2 is the highest BGP attribute in BGP best-path route selection.
- B. No, AS #2 can choose to alter the local preference attribute to overwrite the best-path route selection over the lower MED advertisement from AS #1. This local preference attribute is cascaded across AS

#2 for the BGP best-path route selection.

C. No, AS #2 can choose to alter the weight attribute in R2 for BGP neighbor R1, and this weight value is cascaded across AS #2 for BGP best-path route selection.

D. Yes, because MED plays a deterministic role in return traffic engineering in BGP.

E. Yes, because a lower MED forces BGP best-path route selection in AS #2 to choose R1 as the best path for 10.10.10.0/24.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

Explanation:

MED and AS path prepending can both be used to influence the way incoming traffic from other Autonomous Systems get sent to the local AS, but they provide no guarantee as the other AS ultimately has the final word in how they send traffic. Since local preference is preferred over MED in the BGP decision process, the other AS can configure local preference to override the MED settings you have configured.
